

Kindness is Contagious Pass it around!

A man was driving when he noticed an elderly lady stranded at the side of the road. He stopped his car beside her Mercedes and got out. While approaching her he smiled, but she looked worried. She thought he didn't look safe and his appearance was so poor and shabby. He could see she was frightened and said "Don't worry, I'm here to help you. My name is Brian Anderson."

The tire was so flat he had to crawl right under her car. While changing the tyre he got dirty and his hands were hurt. "How much do I owe you for your help?" she asked. Brian smiled "if you really want to pay me back, the next time you see someone in need, give them the assistance they need and think of me."

That evening the lady stopped at a small café. She noticed the waitress, heavily pregnant and on her feet all day to earn a wage, but who still gave her a sweet, friendly smile. The lady wondered how someone that tired and overworked could be so kind and serving to a stranger. Then she remembered Brian. When she finished her meal, she left £100 on the table with a note on the napkin "You don't owe me anything. Someone helped me, like I am now helping you. If you want to pay me back, help someone the when they are in need and think of me." The waitress found four more £100 notes under the napkin.

That night the waitress came home from work early. She was thinking about the lady - how could she have known how much she and her husband worried about the new baby and how much they needed this money.

She was delighted to tell her husband her good news. Then she kissed him and whispered "Now everything will be alright. I love you, Brian Anderson."
